The new Somatosphere Facebook page

By Eugene Raikhel

We've started a new Somatosphere page on Facebook. "Liking" the page will allow you to follow new posts on Somatosphere on FB — as updates in your timeline. In addition to new Somatosphere posts, we'll be posting occasional shorter items that we come across online. We'll also be highlighting some of the posts from our archive — particularly those with resonance to current news stories or active online conversations.

Somatosphere has actually been on Facebook for a while, but through the Networked Blogs (NB) service. Those of you who follow us through NB needn't worry: that page will continue to be updated through the Somatosphere feed. However, we will now be encouraging readers who use Facebook to follow us through the new page. Because it integrates updates directly into one's timeline, this seems like a big improvement over having to use an app such as NB.

As always, if you have suggestions for pieces you'd like to see on Somatosphere, or are interested in contributing, please contact us at admin AT somatosphere DOT net.
